

Atlanta Daily World Coverage: 1931-2003

To see history through the eyes of the Southern black community, start here.

W.A. Scott II founded the Atlanta Daily World at a time when most black Americans lived in the South. He felt that “the race problem” could only be solved in the South, which required an informed community. Rather than reading news about African-Americans “through the optics of a host of prejudiced white papers,” he launched his own newspaper to educate, inspire, uplift, and promote the expression of the Southern black community.

Follow first-hand coverage of the infamous Scottsboro Case; read reviews of Richard Wright’s best-selling protest novel, Native Son; witness the fight for civil rights from a black, Southern perspective; and more through this historically important newspaper.

Home to the first black correspondent assigned to cover the White House, this newspaper continues to inform the Atlanta metropolitan community and beyond. More than seven decades of this newspaper’s historic coverage, online and easily searchable, is available from ProQuest for both researchers and readers.

Illuminate history. Preserve the past.

ProQuest is proud to play a role in preserving this historic newspaper for future generations. The Atlanta Daily World, like all titles within the ProQuest Historical Newspapers™—Black Newspapers collection, lets researchers:

- Browse complete issues, cover to cover.
- Search by more than 20 article types, keyword, date ranges, specific dates, author, and more.
- Focus on relevant information quickly with hit-term highlighting.

- View news articles, photos, advertisements, classified ads, obituaries, cartoons, and more for added context.
- Print and download articles and images in PDF format.
- Study the progression of issues over time with ProQuest’s complete runs of newspapers.
- Cross-search topics with all ProQuest Historical Newspapers, such as the Chicago Defender and The New York Times with Index, for a broader view of issues and events.

Focus on research instead of the mechanics of finding data.

ProQuest makes it easy for both novice researchers and information professionals to find relevant information quickly, with basic and advanced search options. Searches can be confined to specific article types and dates to focus on the most relevant information. Each newspaper page is zoned into article images, and each newspaper image is supported with searchable ASCII text. Combined, these features mean faster, more effective searches for users. ProQuest digitizes documents at a high resolution to deliver clean, readable images, and highlights search terms to focus readers on the most relevant content.

Researchers can sort their results by oldest, most recent, or most relevant. In addition, stories that originally spanned multiple pages of a newspaper are “threaded” together, appearing as one continuous image and improving readability. Users can view and easily download articles, front pages, photos, display ads, and more in PDF format. The “My Research” summary feature can be used to track recent searches, save articles, email documents, create a bibliography, export citations, and create Web pages.

Your single source for centuries of continuous historical news coverage.
